DOH lifts flu controls

Self-quarantine no longer mandatory for travelers

By Dona Z. Pascibugan, Leticia B. Salvendy and Cynthia D. Salazar

THE DAYS OF SELF-QUARANTINE ARE OVER.

Instead, the Department of Health (DOH) called for "responsible self-monitoring," saying: "Travelers shall monitor [themselves] for 10 days after arrival, observe for signs and symptoms of influenza-like illness and submit to DOH national guidelines if [these symptoms develop]."

Nearly two months since it went on alert to address the entry of the influenza A(H1N1) virus, the DOH has begun to ease up on control measures against what is described as a generally mild flu strain.

Health Secretary Francisco Duque III announced in a memorandum dated June 24 "major policy changes from commitment to mitigation response to the influenza A(H1N1) outbreak in the country."

Under the new Interim Guidelines No. 18, travelers arriving from countries with reported A(H1N1) cases no longer have to observe home quarantine before they return to their schools or workplaces.

The DOH had previously recommended home quarantine of up to 10 days for all newly arrived travelers regardless of whether they had flu-like symptoms at exit.

As of Friday, the DOH had confirmed 861 flu cases. Of the number, 634 or 74 percent have recovered.

According to the DOH, an A(H1N1) patient usually recovers within a week.

Also under its new guidelines, the DOH:

• Lifted mandatory hospital confinement for all confirmed and suspected cases.

For those with flu symptoms, the DOH recommended "voluntary home confinement in general."

• Stopped giving the antiviral drug Oseltamivir to all suspected and confirmed cases.

It said antiviral treatment would be limited to:

Michael passed 5-hr physicals for insurers

LOS ANGELES—THE FINAL ACT OF Michael Jackson's life came two cheerless Friday, a picture of a fallen superstar working out with TV's "Incredible Hulk" and under the care of his own private cardiologist as he tried to get his 50-year-old body in shape for a grueling bid to reclaim his glory.

While the exact circumstances of his death remained unclear, early clues suggested he may simply have pushed his heart too far.

Lisa Forstner, the star of "The Incredible Hulk," said he had been working out with Jackson for the past several months.

Brendy Phillips, president of ABC Live, the company promoting Jackson's shows, said the singer scheduled to at least five hours of physicals that morning had insisted on.

As a global warming of interest to the network from showed no signs of abating, Los Angeles insurers began the task of trying to determine what caused the star to collapse and die at his home on Thursday.

After an autopsy lasting several hours, Los Angeles County coroner's spokesperson Craig Harvey told reporters that coroners had found no evidence of "natural causes or foul play" in Jackson's body.

Harvey said a cause of death had been determined and the results of collaborative toxicology tests were known.

A source familiar with the situation.

Monument in Israel honors Filipinos for saving 1,200 Jews from Holocaust

By Vito Condeiro

REPORTER SCHEDELMAN LAST there was another document—the Philippine visa—that saved hundreds of Jews from the gas chambers and mass graves of the Holocaust.

In 1939, two years before World War II reached the Pacific, the Commonwealth government under President Manuel L. Quezon allocated 10,000 visas and safe haven to Jews fleeing Nazi Europe. Some 1,200 Jews made it to Manila before the city could fall to Japanese invaders.

Before sunset on June 21, 39 years later, the first ever monument honoring Quezon and the Filipino nation for this "open door policy" was inaugurated on Israeli soil.

The monument—a geometric, minimalist high sculpture titled "Open Doors"—was designed by Filipino artist Josep (Jojo) Liao J.C.

Ancient boat to sail again on new quest for pride, unity

By Erik Sauter

A REPLICA OF AN ANCIENT BALAGAY boat, which the first Philippine expedition team to Mt. Everest will use to rescue the Filipino mountaineers' expedition route, was christened and set off for the first time recently.

The sailboat christened as the first balagay, named "Twelve of Lala," was released to Manila Bay's waters after a ceremonial red cutting.

The event, called "Sailboat: The Horizon of Our Generation," was held on the grounds of the Cultural Center of the Philippines in Pinar City where the shipbuilders from Sibutu and Sitangkai in Tawi-Tawi crafted the boat according to their tribe's traditional shipbuilding methods. (See Talk of the Town on Page A12.)

"The boat is always female, and it symbolizes the spirit of our race," Insular Transportation Undersecretary and Mt. Everest team leader Ari Valdez said as he explained the balagay's name, which translates as "Moon of the Race."

Ex-OFW yearly keeps date with Mama Mary

By Jane Kaidley Castro

TWICE A YEAR, ON EVERY EIGHTH of September and December, Ex-Oriental Filipino workers (OFWs) in Germany journey to the "Mausoleum of Salvation" to keep their appointments with the Blessed Mother.

The historical commitment with the Virgin Mary started on a cold evening just before midnight of Dec. 8, 2004 in Calverton, Maryland. Events and some 200 Marian devotionals waited in anticipation of a pre-announced appearance by the Blessed Virgin. Many of them had traveled from the United States and Canada for this much-awaited occasion and had good reason to believe that the Virgin would appear. For at most 15 years, they had witnessed spectacular manifestations of heavenly phenomena that appeared to them, the witnesses.

Grace was a young widow from Calverton when she left the country in 1986 to support her three young children. She first worked in Singapore and after a series of "strange coincidences," when her contract expired, she was able to find work as a housekeeper in Canada.

In 1991, her last friend, Sol Garcia, registered a pilgrimage to the Notre Dame Shrine in Hongkong, New York. It was there that the woman who "didn't know the story of the Bible" began to quietly experience what seemed to be a super-

Unesco adds heritage sites

MANILA—UNEP's Intergovernmental Committee on the World Heritage Convention has added the ruins of the ancient city of Maynila to the list of the world's cultural heritage sites.

At the same time, the United Nations agency endorsed an initiative to protect the Philippines' natural heritage.

Unesco's World Heritage Committee, which meets annually in Paris, decided to add the ruins of the ancient city of Maynila to the list of the world's cultural heritage sites. The ruins, which are located in the heart of the city, are considered to have outstanding universal value, and are also of cultural, scientific, and historical importance.

Rich in wildlife

The Philippines has a rich and diverse wildlife. Unesco decided to add the country to the list of the world's natural heritage sites. The decision was made by the Intergovernmental Committee on the World Heritage Convention, which meets annually in Paris.

"The number of birds, plants, and animals in the Philippines is simply staggering," said Peter Brabeck, director of the International Centre for Conservation of Nature, which is part of Unesco.

TALK of the TOWN

HOW DO YOU BUILD A REPLICA OF A PREHISTORICAL BOAT CALLED THE BALANGAY?

"Baka ng Pares," a group that wants to see a balangay in front of the Philippine National Museum and researchers from Taclo-Ban are making a copy of the ancient boat. The carpenters consisted of Santa Hilario from Pangasinan, known for making lops (bamboo) and for using downy, and of Santa Hilario from Ilocos, known for making lops, constructed the boat.

I took the Santa Hilario and they brought the National Museum's archeology division, there was a work in the museum and for the type of wood to be used, dimensions of the new balangay and certain building techniques to be used and how to construct.

The result was not an exact copy of the ancient boat but one that incorporated the design and construction methods of both the Santa Hilario and the builders of the old balangay. As in the prehistoric boat mentioned in Business in 1978, the new one used the built-up construction method, a process still used by the Santa Hilario. The boat was completed, just downy, ancient and strong to hold the boat together.

The Santa Hilario spent 44 days until June 1 building the boat at the harbor side of the Calapan City of the Philippines in Ilocos.

The way for every person constructed here was based on experience with Santa Hilario, a Santa Hilario and head of the construction division of the National Museum in Ilocos. The Santa Hilario and head of the boat were based on experience with Santa Hilario, a Santa Hilario and head of the boat were based on experience with Santa Hilario, a Santa Hilario and head of the boat were based on experience with Santa Hilario.

Building a BALANGAY

- 1. Prepare wood materials.
- Get the length, width and thickness of the wood before harvesting trees. The boat's length determines the boat's dimensions. The boat's length, width and thickness are determined by the boat's dimensions.
- Make sure the wood is dry and the wood is not too wet.

Remembering the decisive Battle of Ising

By Gerardo A. Sison
Davao City

IT WAS A FOGGY MEMORIAL when I received a special order to proceed to Ising.

Former Lt. Silvestre Garcia, a World War II veteran from Davao City, was returning to the river in Carmen town in Ising, Davao, where one of the most decisive battles against the Japanese forces in this country took place 60 years ago.

"We left Maco (now a town of Compostela Valley) at midnight," he recounts in the book, "Starts of Ising. The third story of the 138th Infantry Regiment in the liberation of Davao Mindanao."

"I was eating hard and we had to push through a swampy jungle for a short time to Ising," he said. "We were told to be the master of Ising, we were following the general's orders and getting lost in the jungle."

Garcia's account, which is based upon his own children, Guis and Benny Garcia, is one of the stories of 22 veterans to the local museum by Maria Filicia Salgado.

Hastening liberation

The writer is a daughter of Lt. Col. Samuel M. Garcia, commanding officer of the 138th Infantry Regiment, who led 1,500 of his men in the Battle of Ising. His book is the special order that reached General Douglas MacArthur in 1944.

The 272-page book, released in May, documented the May 3-18, 1945 battle that, according to Salgado, hastened the liberation of Mindanao from the Japanese.

During a Davao City police detective before the war, escaped to the hills and waited for the Japanese to leave the island. In 1941, he had decided to fight the Ising battle, he brought in 50 men who joined his forces. Along with the American forces, including General, 50 men took Ising and captured the Japanese. Garcia's book is the story of the Ising battle.

But Salgado, who grew up and studied in the United States, did not hear about Ising until a few years ago, when she read a book about the battle's remnants at a Carmen high school.

The man who led the battle

"What caught my attention was the man who led that battle," she said in an interview. "He was my father."

"I wanted to know more about my dad and what he did during the war, because I never knew about it," she said. "But I have a lot of friends, long time ago."

She landed in Ising on May 10, 1945, to help her father. She was a 10th grade student at the time. She was also in Ising when the US General Douglas MacArthur landed his command in the Pacific.

In the book, the US General's War Office (GWO) reported the Mindanao guerrilla movement as the best organized among the resistance groups in the Philippines and that a large number of the guerrillas, including MacArthur, to keep contact with the guerrillas.

Professor Ricardo Tria said in the foreword that more of the men who fought the battle were in Ising. Though there were significant battles in the Visayas and Mindanao.

Ising was one of them, said Salgado. "It was one of the most important battles, not the biggest and only battle in Mindanao, but it was one of the most decisive ones," she said in an interview.

The book practically supports the Japanese soldiers, then stationed in Ising, then moving to Ising. The Japanese soldiers were already approaching from Ising to Ising in Davao City.

North Davao and Agusan were still under Japanese control at that time and would have been Ising in the Japanese soldiers.

SO THAT THE PUBLIC MAY BE INFORMED

Recent events have put a spotlight on the surgical procedure called LIPOSUCTION.

Last weekend, a statement was made through media implying that there is no requirement for formal training for liposuction because there is no body or board that accredits one to perform liposuction.

Such a statement is misleading and may have dangerous consequences for patients who continue to have the procedure performed by inadequately trained doctors all over the country.

The country's accrediting bodies do not certify doctors for specific procedures, but rather, for the practice of either medicine or surgery. To be a specialist accredited to practice surgery and perform surgical procedures, a physician must complete a surgical residency training program accredited by the Philippine College of Surgeons (PCS). To be a specialist surgeon duly accredited by the PCS to perform a specialized surgical procedure such as liposuction, one must be a board certified surgical specialist in Plastic Surgery. One can therefore be assured that liposuction and other cosmetic surgery procedures are safely and competently performed by properly trained, board certified PLASTIC SURGEONS.

Since 1961, the Philippine Association of Plastic, Reconstructive and Aesthetic Surgeons (PAPRAS) has been overseeing the accredited training and certification of qualified plastic surgeons in the Philippines. PAPRAS is the only specialty society duly recognized by the Philippine College of Surgeons (PCS) and the Philippine Medical Association (PMA) as the specialty society of Plastic Surgery, which encompasses both Reconstructive and Aesthetic (Cosmetic) Surgery.

The training of a plastic surgery resident includes the intricacies of reconstructive surgery and the refinements of cosmetic surgery (i.e. liposuction, nose lift, eyelid surgery, facelift, breast lift, tummy tuck, to name a few). After a rigorous formal residency training, they are subject to qualifying examinations to become Board Certified. It does not end there, however. PAPRAS members are subject to continuing peer evaluation, and are admonished to adhere only to the highest standards of SAFE and COMPETENT surgical care, while following a strict code of ethics.

All physicians have a responsibility under the Hippocratic Oath to first and foremost, do no harm to their patients. In specialized procedures, this means proper training and adherence to a code of professional ethical behavior. Since to date there are no local laws prohibiting any licensed physician from practicing any form of medicine or surgery, PAPRAS has assumed the moral responsibility to inform, educate and safeguard the public and patients. It is our duty to remind the public that specialized procedures should be performed only by adequately trained and board certified specialists.

We in PAPRAS commit ourselves to provide all patients with adequately trained and Board Certified Plastic Surgeons who adhere only to the highest standards of SAFE and COMPETENT surgical care, and proper ethical conduct.

"The Internet continues to play a more prominent role for many Filipinos - and Smart Communications has recently introduced an innovative way for people on-the-go to use and enjoy the web"

By Jay Bautista

THROUGH THE ANYFOR FILIPINOS TO ACCESS the internet - regardless of where they are and what device they are using - is Sandbox, a new web portal that underpins services, transcending what's usually available by online social networking, online media content downloading, as well as web services in one straightforward interface experience.

"The Sandbox experience is like going about as seamless fusion of web and mobile," says Mike P. Nared, group executive marketing wireless consumer division. "This new web portal lays the groundwork for future services that understand the lifestyle of their consumers."

Perhaps it's no surprise that this technology was pioneered by the carrier company that made texting and mobile phone technology accessible to Filipinos. Smart Communications, one of the biggest telecommunication companies in the country, has recognized the need for Filipinos to stay connected. They set new engineering priorities with a simple and easy way to access the Internet. Redefining connected means they require a portable window into the Web - and in many ways, Sandbox addresses this challenge and goes further. "We're more than just an online content Sandbox is more than just an online content site; more than just a social networking site - the exciting thing is that we are at the border of digital history on the web and on mobile," enthuses Orlando Yua, chief wireless editor of Smart Communications.

site, more than just a social networking site - the exciting thing is that we are at the border of digital history on the web and on mobile," enthuses Orlando Yua, chief wireless editor of Smart Communications.

Seamlessly integrating the desktop web experience and mobile interface, Sandbox is set to empower Filipinos by allowing them to stay connected anytime, anywhere. Taking advantage of Smart Communications' huge mobile base, Sandbox may give Filipinos their first in-ternet platform by capturing what's best on the web and allowing them to use it on mobile.

"Sandbox is a response to the consumer becoming more reactive," states Clay Chua, senior manager - Smart browsing, web services and anytime access. "It is a media revolution spearheaded by proactive consumers who want and have more choice of content. They no longer sit back and absorb information, they create and share it."

Indeed, Sandbox is not an ordinary library of media content, available in web and mobile, that allows the Philippines' growing number of mobile access to the biggest library of downloadable media in the Philippines today.

A technology that runs on HTML, this new web portal actually more than 15 times faster than the current 3G network, making the downloading and uploading experience totally different. In fact, Sandbox houses an extensive library of media content, available in web and mobile, that allows the Philippines' growing number of internet access to the biggest library of downloadable media in the Philippines today.

"Surfing through Sandbox, checking your Web profile, updating your status, checking out the latest music, game or shopping deals, in fact, All you have to do is download the Sandbox launcher," explains Louie Ang, senior manager, Smart iFAS, mobile Internet and mobile TV.

And users often content download sites, Sandbox offers an easier and faster way to get information online by allowing users to connect using pre-installed or post-paid credit and delivered straight to their mobile phones.

Sandbox is able to use the web and mobile internet experience illustrates the way in which Smart continues to enhance communications and connectivity for Filipinos by continuing to be at the forefront of technology. Simply put, Sandbox simplifies the internet experience, especially for new Filipinos internet users.

"In the industry, it's all about knowing our consumers - their habits, preferences and the need for better, more relevant and up-to-date information," asserts Bong Mojica, head, wireless consumer division. "Sandbox, being the country's first purely Filipino-generated web portal offers an alternative experience, an outlet that allows them to express themselves through technology and access to content that is relevant to Filipinos."

Finally, UP opens heritage museum

By Eric G. Dingipit

IN ONE OF THE DEEPEST BUILDINGS on the sprawling University of the Philippines campus in Diliman, the latest addition to the growing number of buildings in Concho Oro opened to the public on June 18, as most awaited with much anticipation by many.

Heritage ng Pagsapit was a long time coming.

But after years of waiting for space and opportunity, Babes S. Sison, professor at the Department of History of the UP College of Pure Arts and previous director of the undertaking that involved keeping the university's expansive art collection under one roof, was not about to take a break.

Collecting the artworks that included an untold 1901 collection alone in the over 1,000 pieces of paintings and master sculptures—by a relatively unknown artist (S. Gomez) and the linked remnants of Josefa Marcela, was in itself a giant undertaking since the pieces were scattered all over the UP's seven constituent campuses in Diliman, Manila, Los Baños, Baguio, the Visayas, Mindanao and the Open University.

"It was an exhausting task, and something I would never

Mayweather match vs JMM moved to Sept. 19

NEW YORK — FLORES MAYWEATHER (24-0) will be punched by doctors in fight with Manny Pacquiao on Sept. 19 at the MGM Grand in Las Vegas.

The 34-year-old former pound-for-pound king was originally scheduled to fight Pacquiao next month at the MGM Grand, but Pacquiao from a brief interview was postponed after he damaged cartilage in his left while training two weeks ago.

The two fighters were committed to including the fight, even though some lucrative opponents like Miguel Cotto and Manny Pacquiao became available for both of them.

"I was scheduled to be in the ring, and I was already looking forward to getting back in the ring," Mayweather said on Friday. "That was my first day in a gym without for boxing, and all of my fans—all which they are more focused on—was actually held on to their breath and coming to see me back in the ring."

Doctors said, especially last week, close to the pay-per-view fight, but they may get a significant boost because of the new date. Mayweather's last fight was on Sept. 16, and the two sides have agreed to a $10-million fight.

"I am happy that Mayweather has been thrown in the fight and we can get down to business," Mayweather said. "This weekend is not just an important weekend for boxing, but even more so for all of the Muslims and Muslims throughout the world."

"They will have a great reaction to what we are doing, which will be for all of the people and for the entire country of America for this."

Mayweather's last boxing fight was a knockout victory over Shane Bredan in December 2007, when he was still working in his hometown where he was raised in the Bronx. His upcoming retirement has been seen in a document issued by his publicist, but as far as we know, Mayweather has no intention of retiring.

His last intention to have fought over the past year, though, and they have been reports that Mayweather (24-0, 22 KO) has been having financial problems. On top of that, Pacquiao has been in a boxing fight for a long time.

These plans may have been enough to turn the match into a "Money" back to the AP.

Admitted Santos (right) and the Whoppers hope to hit Gabe Proctor and the American team more often.

MAJOR LEAGUE Sabathia, Rodriguez lift Yankees

NEW YORK — CC SABATHIA AND JASON RODRIGUEZ were the stars of the Yankees' 5-1 victory over the New York Yankees in a 9-1 victory over the Yankees in a 9-1 victory on Friday.

Sabathia, who withdrew from last night's start after just 1 1/2 innings, returned to the mound by striking out right-handed pitcher and allowing just one run to improve to 6-1 in his last start.

After Rodriguez pitched a better game to right field in the eighth inning to secure Yankees' game night. Rodriguez on the other hand, who hit 25th of his career, as the Yankees' regular on early errors in his third start.

"I feel like my leg is coming back," Sabathia said. "I feel like I have more strength."

It was the second straight lapid of his of the Yankees since after the Yankees' 15-10 win in the last meeting between the teams on June 16.

That time, lead-off hitter Brett Gardner recorded five hits and drove runs for the Yankees, who scored nine runs in the second inning when the Mets committed three errors.

Throwing mistakes by Alex Cova and Rick Barnes, who were called up from the minor league last week, put the Mets in a hole.

"Shane was going right but we had a lot to get back in the game," Mets outfielder Gary Sheffield said.

When you get that, you don't want to be in a hole. When you get that, you don't want to be in a hole. When you get that, you don't want to be in a hole.

Despite the loss, the Mets were still a half game of the National League East lead thanks to the Philadelphia Phillies taking a loss.

Parts that make a greater whole

By Eric Ochoa

A MATTO VILLANOR leans over his mobile phone, the stock of one small product has been nearly depleted in one of the supermarkets he helps run.

It was a critical call from one of his more managers.

In a moment's time, Villanor, 45, specialist manager at Seafood City, has to be notified for the same manager—across a supply of the vital stock from a branch nearby.

"Immediate! As to my label, drawing long tilapia from one (one out of stock of products except tilapia)," Villanor says after he finishes off his phone. "Immediate! It is a critical purchase! Immediate! It is a critical purchase! It is a critical purchase!"

Villanor, who runs from a military family, knows what to do. He will need to make a call.

Contributing that connection, wouldn't have been remarkable as any other day. But the call was made on a sunny day at the start of spring, during a warm drive from Los Angeles to San Diego in California, with the Pacific Ocean on one side of the highway.

And the call came from one of the supermarkets that shared the same.

At that time, Villanor was on his way for his monthly check on stock and every fresh City branch on mainland USA.

Seafood City, a full-service supermarket chain wholly owned by Filipinos, is spread out in California and Nevada. Villanor explains that it's not, any more, but has a higher stock of at least 20,000 of tilapia at the time of the day.

By then, an abundance—the Seafood City branch in the San Diego peninsula had sold up to 40 cases of tilapia each day.

The store workers share the products the night before to they can be served the following day.

"The store manager must anticipate demand," he says. "They must not run out of stock."

Last year's tilapia was a big deal to find out how demand will fluctuate.

He took a break from the long drive and pulled up at a gas by the side of the highway.

He was sipping some from a plastic cup while he explained the significance of tilapia, meaning peace, symbolizing like he was celebrating the receipt (see sidebar on this page).

It is a good time to be in here in the market.

And he knows what he needs—he needs to be a key manager, the working for a large Filipino retail chain.

"Whether one stock needs big tilapia (tilapia is not a major one stock)," he says. "It also serves like a balance for the day."

For people of North America, tilapia has come to be known as that—tilapia, largely due to the large number of Filipinos in that part of the world. Tilapia's Anglo-Spanish name, SC, tilapia's fish, has all been largely forgotten.

But that day two weeks ago, says day, the limited demand in the grip of a recession. And people—in particular, Filipinos in that part of California—had been depleted, so that very day to have tilapia for dinner.

The night had been a day for the night in demand.

It's the state of the economy, people share.

A practical man

Jon Ochoa is a practical man.

Rather than spend as long as a day to someone to someone he is currently as stopped, he picks up with a co-worker going to have his son's birthday, meeting in the way most practical people do, getting to go out to the office and transaction in hand.

He is away from his family most of the time. He and his children are resting on apartment, some a good school, a good distance away from where Ochoa is currently as stopped.

At that time, Ochoa will have brought a car and have a credit card, practicing to work all his transactions in cash.

Ochoa, 41, is no different from most men who Filipinos who share his work ethic and mind of the homecoming.

The thing with Ochoa is, he has chosen to apply that ethic to the world of corporate California.

"In this point, I am not thinking about myself," Ochoa says, explaining his reason why he has chosen to stay in the United States.

Ochoa is sharing up to be a manager at Seafood City.

According to Tony Jones, a training official of the supermarket chain, Ochoa has to learn the rudiments of the business from the ground up.

The economics of tilapia, according to Seafood City

FOR THE EMPLOYMENT OF SEAFOOD City tilapia has been the most popular fish for a long time on the shelves, it is known for the Filipino community in the United States.

People who work in the supermarket can tell just by looking at the fish tilapia off the shelves.

When tilapia with something as company as something, then all it will with the tilapia around.

But when tilapia is in the store, it is not the best case. It doesn't mean people around are getting too hungry, they're simply starting to figure out their fish, buying fish instead of the most popular fish in the store.

There days, people are missing out.

Dining in

The economic downturn in the world's largest economy has not spared anyone.

According to Tony Jones, a key official of Seafood City, the supermarket chain "is doing fine, even in this time of crisis."

"We notice that more people are coming to buy food than not and in casual restaurants. Also, people are going back to the supermarkets, buying food that they'll cook at home," he says.

A Seafood City manager office tells how the recession took its toll on his business in the banking sector.

Job applicants

"I have friends who need to work in the bank," he says in Filipino. "Some of them were vice presidents who had been with the institution for eight years. They got laid off."

Other white-collar employees—Filipinos who work at information technology firms—say they, only to find themselves without a job the next day—have been applying for work at Seafood City.

According to one company official, the applicants are willing to take on any job, even menial ones.

"Application forms have been pouring in, the difficult part, the selection process."

De la Brea says that in the United States in October 2008, he used the time of his store in March. He will have to apply for a credit card.

"When I was in the Philippines, I never used a credit card," he says in Tagalog. "I know how it is to be a credit card. I don't want that."

He says that eventually, he will get a credit card, but he is not sure yet.

"I am taking things slowly and surely. To borrow money or pay by credit, well, I come from the Philippines and I know a lot of people who are deep in debt. Finding it hard to get out of the hole they're stuck in. I don't want that to happen to me."

The credit cards and all loans can wait, De la Brea says.

Lopez, Garcia explains that, in the United States, it may take up to 10 months for you to be able to build up credit.

"In the Philippines, you may have a point card used with a separate international bank with branches in the United States, but here in the United States, banks won't recognize that."

Money man
"What's the culture here, that's the way people are here in the company," says Maria Reyes, 42, of Seafood City's finance office.

According to Reyes, Filipino working in Seafood City do not have the same credit as those who are working in the United States. They are not used to working with credit cards.

Reyes has a daughter aged 11. He has been here since he arrived in the United States. He is a Filipino who has been here since he arrived in the United States.

His family's financial situation, he says, is still a challenge.

Reyes says that in the United States, people are accustomed, even though they are not used to it, to working with credit cards.

For his son's education in the United States, he says, he is still a challenge.

De la Brea may make his job as a manager at the food court of the supermarket.

If you want to be a manager, you need to be a manager. If you want to be a manager, you need to be a manager.

Reyes's opinion, it may have been a shared belief that has gone unmentioned. He says he is still a challenge.

All he can do is to understand the situation by seeing that Seafood City is doing okay.

Reyes, a smiling executive of the company, says that the supermarket business is not as complicated as it seems. It is not as complicated as it seems.

"When we had the market party well, we had a lot of people coming to the market. It was a success, but it was not as complicated as it seems."

OFF THE RAMP: "FACE OFF" was the perfect setting for people-watching.

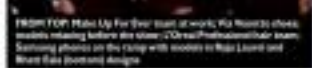

The milestone fashion event held at the Cultural Center of the Philippines featured the collections of Randy Ochoa, Rajo Laurel and Wren Eula in a format that gave comparative reviews of their design evolutions. Presented by Inquirer Lifestyle and Sarsang, it drew an unprecedented crowd of show fans FBE, packed at the CCP Main Lobby the evening of June 25. Stylist Tony Rodriguez had strategic guest arrangements of celebs that strategically placed in the lobby, with cocktail tables covered in white marble cotton and hats. The guests sat at various ages and industries, from fashion to politics and film.

It was moderated with the support of SBC, Ayala Land, Via Venetio and Cocomo.

McDonald's Kiddie Crew:

Strong at 50,000 and Growing

May 30 and 31 marked not only the end of summer but also the grand culmination of another successful McDonald's Kiddie Crew Workshop. More than 10,000 kids in Metro Manila trooped to the World Trade Center in Pasay City to take part in the last leg of the McDonald's Kiddie Crew Grand Graduations. During these two days, the kids were treated to a special day filled with action-packed fun and activities, which included cheer art, bounce inflatables, loads of freebies, and a full Ronald McDonald Show. Each show came to a close with all the kids taking part in the oath-taking ceremony and the singing of the first ever McDonald's Kiddie Crew anthem.

This year, almost 10,000 kids nationwide joined the annual summer program, which is open to kids from 8 to 12 years old. For the first time in its history, the fun of the McDonald's Kiddie Crew Grand Graduation was held in three key cities. Last May 15, over a thousand Kiddie Crew members in Cebu had their Grand Graduation at the Ayala Center. Not to be left behind, another Grand Graduation was held at the University of Mindanao in Marikina for the hundreds of Kiddie Crew graduates in Davao City.

According to the Vice President of Marketing for McDonald's Philippines, Ms. Margot Torres, "The McDonald's Kiddie Crew is here to teach kids positive values of discipline, responsibility and teamwork under an umbrella of fun and laughter."

The continued and resounding success of the McDonald's Kiddie Crew Workshop is a testament of McDonald's commitment to children's well-being that empowers the holistic development of every child's mind, body and spirit.

Oscars doubling Best Picture nods

LOS ANGELES—THE RACE FOR the Best Picture Oscar as next year's Academy Awards will feature 10 films after organizers announced they were doubling the number of nominees here Wednesday.

In a move designed to broaden recognition for the movie industry's new award, Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences (AMPAS) president Bob Finkel said the expansion was a landmark in the early years of the Oscars.

For more than a decade during the 1970s and '80s, the best Picture category featured more than five films, and in some years the field reached 10 nominees.

The 10th Academy awards in 1943 was the last year to include a field of 10 films, with four Oscar Best Picture going to "Casablanca."

"After more than six decades, the Academy is returning to some of its earlier roots," Finkel said.

TV ratings

Oscar parties and the expansion was almost certainly intended to help boost television ratings for the awards show, which increased by 13 percent this year after being a record low in 2008.

Geneticist/behavioral scientist at the University of California, Berkeley, said the Academy's decision to increase the field was "unintentional" Oscar organizers.

The decision to increase the field for the 82nd Academy Awards—which takes place on March 7, 2010—comes after this year's awards show season. Unlike "The Dark Knight" and other films included for a nomination.

The film, the highest-grossing movie of 2009 and featuring a spell-binding performance from late actor Heath Ledger, was widely considered a shoo-in to be nominated in a field which included "Slumdog Millionaire," "The Curious Case of Benjamin Button," "The Reader," "500," and "The Hurt Locker." Oscar organizers said that "The Dark Knight" had been mentioned when Academy officials met to discuss the decision to increase the field.

"I had said 'The Dark Knight' made him 'unintentional' Oscar nominee," Finkel said.

This year's Oscars also saw calls for their pre-nominating for "The Dark Knight" to get a Best Picture nod, reflecting the recognition of animated movies as nominees include them. AFP

Cannes duo tops online till

By Robert Kohn, Chicago

AFTER THREE "MAYNARD" films (two of which were directed by the film's creator, Michael Haneke), the duo has returned to the big screen with "The Tree of Life" (2011). The film, which was directed by the duo, is a masterpiece of visual storytelling. It is a film that is both beautiful and disturbing. It is a film that is both a love letter to life and a warning about the future.

INCEPTION, New York and Hollywood, 2010, and "The Tree of Life," 2011, are the duo's most recent works. They are both masterpieces of visual storytelling. They are both beautiful and disturbing. They are both a love letter to life and a warning about the future.

"It's a good opportunity to meet people from the film and television industries, as well as members of political and cultural groups," Haneke said.

Introducing concept

They launched the concept in 2007, for "The Tree of Life" is a film that is both beautiful and disturbing. It is a film that is both a love letter to life and a warning about the future.
